GCG Announces Integration with Canada's Leading Claims Administrator, Crawford Class Action Services, Debuts International Brand Identity

GCG unites two recognized leaders with proven success executing historic settlement administrations across North America

NEW YORK (June 15, 2017) – Garden City Group, LLC (GCG), a wholly-owned subsidiary of Crawford & Company[®] and a leading global provider of settlement administration solutions, is pleased to announce it has added Canada's oldest and most trusted class action claims administrator – Crawford Class Action Services – to its portfolio. The integration brings together two reputable leaders with a combined half-century of expertise in government, legal, technology and operations and strengthens GCG's capacity to provide premier administration services to clients across North America.

Crawford Class Action Services has been administering class action settlement and voluntary redress programs since class action law came into existence in Canada in 1992. Canadian courts have turned to Crawford Class Action Services to administer cases involving product recalls, water system contamination, tainted blood transfusion, Indian residential schools, institutional duty of care and pharmaceutical and medical device defects. Crawford's Canadian Class Action services team has handled some of Canada's most historic settlement programs, including the Hepatitis C class action settlements, Residential Schools Class Action Litigation, KPMG Overtime Redress Plan and the Walkerton Class Action Settlement.

"This integration is an important step toward expanding the GCG brand globally," said Kenneth Cutshaw, president and CEO of GCG. "Crawford Class Action Services has demonstrated its value to the Canadian courts, the legal community and consumers for more than two decades. We look forward to continuing that tradition and to delivering a more comprehensive suite of services to our clients in North America and around the world.”

Michael Mooney, vice president and general manager of Crawford Class Action Services, will remain at the helm of GCG’s Canadian operations. During his 10-year tenure, Mooney has earned the confidence of the courts, serving as both a court-appointed monitor and an independent auditor in the pre-settlement stage, where he ensures cases are administered fairly and in accordance with the terms of the settlements and the court’s directives.

“This alignment with GCG affords our clients the perspective of a company that has operated longer and across a broader range of litigation, both of which are critical and competitive advantages in Canada’s emergent class action environment,” said Mooney. “In return, our intimate knowledge of the landscape combined with our access to the Crawford Canada network will have an immediate and positive impact on GCG’s clients across North America.”

New International Brand Identity

In conjunction with its expansion into the Canadian market, GCG today debuted a new logo and brand identity, which reflects both the company’s international growth and its long-standing and on-going commitment to delivering more: more expertise, more value, more technology, more service lines in more countries, and more resources dedicated to providing clients the quality and service they expect. The new branding centers upon the sole use of the GCG acronym.

“We recognize and appreciate how far we’ve come as ‘Garden City Group,’” said Christi Cannon, senior vice president and chief client officer. “But we’re equally excited about the future as GCG, where our brand identity is driven by our industry-leading team and their commitment to solving our clients’ complex challenges in smart, innovative ways. As we continue to expand, our vision and values will inform everything we do, and we think our new branding captures that perfectly.”
